WHY NOT LET WELL ENOUGH ALONE?

The proponents of state-wide prohibition are asking the people to vote next March on the so-called Perry referendum, which repeals the present local option law and seeks to forbid the sale of alcohol and alcoholic liquors in Vermont for any purpose—always excepting Hard Cider.

Under Local Option Vermont has a law which has reduced the number of towns in which liquor is sold from at least 110 towns under state-wide prohibition to 17 towns under local option.

Since the law went into effect in 1903, the tendency has been toward fewer saloons and sobriety.

The first year under local option 96 towns voted "Yes;" in 1915 only 20 towns voted "Yes" and in three of these no licenses were issued. The law is better enforced than state-wide prohibition.
